Perkins, who has made no secret about his distrust of Planned Parenthood, made the remarks during a FRC press conference with Republican presidential nominee Mitt Romney, which was held in Salt Lake City on Wednesday morning. During the presser, Romney acknowledged that Planned Parenthood does some "very, very good things." "They provide an incredible range of services. And I think they're a national treasure," Romney said, adding that "I can't stand in the way of them providing services and help women get their health care." But Perkins, the point man for the Family Research Council's cultural war against women's health care, said that "they also do abortions," and he told the crowd that Planned Parenthood needs to be "sanitized." "We've got to make sure that Planned Parenthood stops providing abortions," he said. "But we've got to make sure that when they do provide abortions, that they also provide adoption and adoptions and other programs that are more helpful for women." Perkins went on to argue that people who are "sexually promiscuous" should not be getting abortions. "We do need to look at access," he said. "And I think there's a place for adoption, and there's a place for adoption." It's not clear how Romney intends to "san
