Agents are small programs that are used by cybercriminals to infect users' computers. They may run quietly in the background and their presence is often overlooked by end users. Agents are typically used for malware distribution, spamming, identity theft, social engineering and click fraud. Agents are most often found in spam emails or more rarely in attachments. Agents can infect users' computers by manipulating users' browsers, search engines and error messages. Their main purpose is to monitor computer use and gather information about the users, their interests, activities, browsing habits and technical capabilities. Agents usually have innocent-looking names that may include words such as 'reminder' or 'misdirection'. Resolve uses known agents' behaviors and properties to stop them. This can block agents' ability to infect a user's computer. The software scans and remediates a range of infected agents and cleans their registry entries. Resolve supports Windows 2000, XP and Vista.
