I have found the property System.Security.Claims.ClaimsPrincipal.Current.Claims.First(c => c.Type == "").Value. In AppData\Local\PackageTargetingOverride.xml, I find the resource, under the element scopedResource="", I can get the image path, and in the resource itself, the image's url is set as the image's src value. The image path is, {To be processed}/"{manifest_version}"/profile/"{pictureType}"/"{pictureId}" For example, if I take the latest picture which is stored in my app, the pictureid is 35, and the pictureType is jpg. The listing, which takes effect Feb. 26, came weeks after the Department of Interior proposed a plan to permanently withdraw a section of the Eastern Navajo Highlands, the largest swath of federal land in the U.S. A decision by the department on whether to open the land for coal mining has already been delayed and its timeline for making a decision remains unclear. But Tuesday's listing of the 2.5 million acres in the Four Corners area - which also encompasses sites in Arizona, New Mexico and Utah - means the area is now officially off-limits to development. The lands are all part of the $845 million Lake Powell Pipeline Project, which would carry about 1.7 billion cubic meters of water from Navajo and Hopi tribes through the region in order to increase the amount of water that flows over Lake Powell on the Arizona-Utah border. "The study of the lands was initiated more than 20 years ago and has undergone an environmental assessment," said Mike Manville, a spokesman for the U.S. Forest Service. "In keeping with our commitment, we are working to complete the study as promptly as possible." The listing is the latest by the Forest Service since it was sued over another withdrawal in the region more than a year ago. The Forest Service deemed 11 tracts of public land in the Waters of the United States, or FWOTUS, a designation that makes them off-limits to commercial and industrial development, including coal, oil and gas extraction and vehicle mining. It marked the fourth time that Navajos had been listed as being in a disturbed condition - two years in one case because of an earthquake, a third because of severe flood 3da54e8ca3
