For the case of randomly placed transmission lines, a conjecture can be made.

Given that the propagation constant of a transmission line is inversely proportional to the separation between the two planes of the metal plates, the lines have a negligible role in determining the frequency range of the first gap mode to couple loss into the 2D graphene. Thus, for arbitrarily placed transmission lines, the power dissipated per graphene sheet will be proportional to the number of transmission lines per sheet. Finally, further insight can be obtained by replacing the transmission lines with magnetic dipoles, which behave as sources of radiation from a dipole at the origin of a vacuum. This suggests that the dominant source of loss for the CVD graphene layer is thermal radiation from the emission of the photonic modes from the nanoscale interfaces (i.e., the gaps). These modes can be used to deposit energy into the graphene sheets, which can subsequently be pumped into the cavity mode (see the appendix for a discussion on the thermal radiation of the graphene-air interface). This serves as a prototype for a 'smart' metamaterial.  [10]{} \[1\][#1]{} url@samestyle \[2\][#2]{}
