"Tiny Metal follows a long tradition of turn-based strategy games with a cute war story and lots of mechanized toys to play with. But while a lot of the genre is simply spectacle with a little strategic bite, Tiny Metal goes the extra mile by leveraging the 3D camera effectively to create an engaging experience where one feels a commanding presence on the battlefield and a vast network of tiny toy soldiers." It was a shocking story that triggered a series of hearings at the Capitol, but, I suspect, the Washington press corps got more pleasure out of it than it got from the story. The fact that the Soviets picked on a naive teenager and then slapped her across the face for insisting on privacy is also fascinating. But the way the media reported it is one of the more egregious examples of an age-old evil, abuse of the press. Reporters sought to make hay. Reporters are political animals. Their goal is to be successful in their jobs. Reporters get into trouble when they do the wrong thing or get taken advantage of by the wrong individual. This happens fairly often. But in this case the press improperly exploited the teenager. She apparently asked questions about the incident. She also offered her version of events. That should be a story. In fact, it is a story. But the story isn't about the Soviet's. It's about a 12-year-old girl. It's about a woman in c9d1549cdd

PinBoy. PJB is PiBo's little brother, who makes PiBo look like a "Bruce"? PinBot: (First appearance in Luigs and TalkingPinBot: Luig's talking Pinbot)PinBot's a visual chatbot. PinBot wasn't so shy when we first met! We made a huge deal out of him, claiming he was the first human-avatar interaction, as well as the first direct digital dialog.One of The Biggest Bipartisan Misunderstandings of 2014 "We believe in an America where no child, no family, no community is left behind because of a lifetime of hard work." —Ted Cruz I think these words were originally spoken in November, when they were written in the spell check, and were supposed to read, "We believe in an America where no child has to pay a single red cent for their education."But after being bounced around for so long, they've wound up meaning something completely different. As you'll recall, last November, President Obama's State of the Union pledge was "an America where the fastest-growing income group in the country is college-graduate-level teachers."So, it was natural when the day came for Congress to officially admit the crisis facing America's public schools, the White House requested more funding than everyone else thought was possible, and Republicans asked, "So, how's that for student scores?" By "everyone" I mean Democrats and the mainstream media, though those last two groups may qualify as an audience.For Republicans, however, it was no laughing matter.It was seen as a power grab: our President is patting himself on the back for passing hugely expensive education programs for which "parents" are really just going to whine and say, "Oh, my God, do we have to pay for all this?" But because it was obviously a bipartisan plan, The Nation's Paul Starr waxed poetic about it in an opinion piece last November: The idea behind the Common Core is to position public schools so that they can contain and accommodate vast numbers of low-income and immigrant families for their first encounters with the American college-readiness system. I agree with that, but what I object to is the way "Common Core" has been made into a cudgel against

As the pilot of a human transport ship, you must leave a devastated planet known only as 'H3', take a trip through deep space and find out what happened. No right or wrong: you are the avenger of your people. It's up to you to decide who lives, who dies, who goes to prison and who gets some peace. Get ready for a story-driven space opera experience! Your Story The events of this game and the characters you encounter are all entirely your own. The decisions you make, and the consequences of those decisions, are all yours, and the world will never be the same after that. You find yourself trapped on a planet which has been ravaged by a freak cataclysm: a meteor shower, the impact of which has flung the outer surface off into space, leaving you to witness the start of a new era. Soon, you find yourself caught up in a fierce war between your species and the inhabiting aliens. For a long time you kept your head down, hiding within the shadows. But now, the people of 'H3' are in desperate need of your help. Will you save them, or will you allow their blood to wash through the streets of this lost world? Your Choices With a lot of freedom to choose any outcome you like, you can do whatever you want to affect the world. The decisions you make, and the consequences of those decisions, are yours to take. Will you play it safe and retreat into a corner? Or will you fight to the very end? It's up to you! An engaging and detailed story The story and characters of H3 are yours to tell. There is a lot of character development, and a number of characters you can interact with in order to learn more about them. Each person is carrying the weight of their own hopes, aspirations and regrets, each with their own dreams and dreams for the future. Advanced AI: A series of decisions will determine the dialogue you have with each character in conversation, leading to some very interesting and surprising results. Time and area: there's always time and area to enjoy, in any event! You can choose to spend your time and/or resources differently, or you can spend your time and/or resources completely frivolously. Not everything is as black and white as it may seem.
