Comments AngularJS - Grouping multiple routerLinks to controllers I currently have multiple controllers that will load data based on variables stored in the router. If I want to navigate to another page, I would make a call to one of the controllers in question. I would therefore have a routerLink that goes to another controller and another variable that says what controller to use. `$route.go([user.id]);` I have done this many times before, but I have reached a point where there is way too much code involved in my case. Is there a way to group these many links into one routerLink? For example... `$route.go([group.id]);` I think that I can use a shared service to store the id, but then how can I load the controller for that specific id? A: I would suggest using Angular's `$injector` as it's used for exactly these cases `$injector.get(user.id)` If the id can't be injected you can access the service directly `$injector.get(UserService).getById(user.id)` Then your route would look something like this `$route.go($injector.get(UserService).getById(user.id))` This invention relates to a fuel for an internal combustion engine, and more particularly to a fuel for an engine that includes a liquid hydrogen carrier fuel. Low-emission internal combustion engines are now in increasing demand as one of the means for the reduction of the atmospheric pollution. This means the replacement of the existing engine with a low-emission engine. However, the existing engine is constructed with hydrocarbon fuels (petrol, diesel oil, etc.), and it is difficult to achieve the low-emission engine by changing the existing engine to a low-emission engine that uses a fuel other than hydrocarbons. In recent years,

The trend is still up, until the local traders realize the party is over and they reverse. The strategy is to use live NASDAQ trade data to see market direction. Many swing traders also use time-frame chart patterns, as well as Elliott Wave Theory, to help them decide when to take a position. The BATS BZX stock split payment structure and the high frequency time-frame risk methodology of NASDAQ appear to be the best of both worlds: robust market data at a lower cost. Wounded soldiers like I am simply take their anger, their fears and any lingering pain and energy to a quiet spot for a while. I was still learning how to trade the market, and the NASDAQ trade floor was the best place to learn because the trades were quickly executed. I'm only interested in profitable trades. To succeed, you have to be willing to make mistakes. One day, while at a hotel in North Conway, New Hampshire, I was talking to an old friend who was a top trader on the floor of the NASDAQ when we suddenly realized that we were so comfortable in the lobby that we didn't have our coats on. I asked the desk clerk where the coat check was. I spent last winter in a Lebanese refugee camp and I just don't seem to have the extra energy. I've gone to these tournaments hoping to learn and develop new skills, and I've had some success, but my actual trading and teaching is my primary source of income. Winning is also great, but I enjoy the challenge of learning.
