SETTING The Lands Between Between Sorrow and Dark Solace On a plateau amid the snowy mountains of Harwyn's Pass, the winds of Dark Solace blow across the sterile lands, hastening the formation of the desolate Wastes. Passing through the Wastes between Mournful Vale and the Dark Solace Caverns, the lonely road is filled with dangers and traps, and all one could glimpse is a dark mountain peak towering above them. The road between Murgo and the Executioner Castle of Zamor 1. SORROW A land of despair. Bitter wind blows across the barren grassland, and monsters, such as the gnash, and the grisp, fill the dark lands with terror. Beautiful maidens and wise beings dwell in hope and happiness, but amidst the wind-swept grasses lie the corpses of unfortunate adventurers who fell victim to the terrible winds. One of the most solitary lands. Under the watchful eye of the mountains, a deserted and desolate land where only the weak and the foolish dare to pass. A twisted tree covered by mist blooms only once every seven years, and if one were to ask of its origin, they would hear only a whisper of lost memories. TARNISH A land where great cities exist in a world of darkness and mist. The lands are vast, and cities and towns are everywhere. Only a handful of gods dwell in the darkness, and divine magic abounds in the world. There is a wilderness called the Wastes in the south, which has been kept in check by the powerful armies of the Dryad Forest. 2. SALVATION A sacred land of legend. At the top of the green earth, all the dangers and plagues of the world meet in a land where silent battles are waged. The Three Cross Plains of Midnendeeep, the mighty crossroads of the world, where the Lord of the South meets the Lord of the West, and where the mighty Supreme King of the Frozen World resides. This is a land where purity and hate are born, and where the tales of a divine hero, an incarnated god, and the child of these two deities come to life. The divine and the divine. At the Cross Plains of Midnendeeep, the Divine Tempestess of the South and the Divine King of the

Platform: Android and iOS

Roel Helmer's gameplay design experience: I had not yet written any games when I decided to build Branching Story. It was more along the lines of games that I had developed before. Their structural and content elements such as the choice system, item system and leveling system were quite similar to past games. They also shared the background of being a virtual world, with the item and construction systems and battle. I have played over 20 games of a similar genre. In such a game, as the situation develops, it was up to the player to reflect on the history and actions of other characters. I like games which do not interrupt or break when the player reflects and I am able to always be thinking about the history of the game. Branching Story is one such game. The game promotes interaction based on possibilities.

The idea for the game came from the Togashi Kyuzo game, which made use of a character that played the role of both a father and son. It occurred to me that it would be possible if you could have a character that reflected the role of a father in such a story. I believe that my idea for the game meets the existing goal to develop one-on-one bonds. A significant portion of the characters' actions have no choice. They are the story which develops according to Branching Story's world. I like games that yield such results. I was also influenced by Takao Fukiishi's games.
