Den is a fantasy life simulation game. It brings the story into the webpage browser and goes on personal adventures with you and your friends.

Den is an adventure game for 9 individuals in which you will lead your own company, meet cute characters, and become a party member or a monster.

The traditional fantasy life simulation game is a cheerful adventure with a strong family bond combined.

From a world in which all living things are monsters, who have a party together and defeat monsters to find a cure to protect their lives, Den gives the player a new form of fantasy life role-playing.

While exploring a new dungeon, your company will first visit the family business part. Among your acquaintances, you can meet various monsters and characters that are stuck in a loop. While solving the problems of your acquaintances, you can obtain the parents such as shield-bearing family members.

Character and business management consists of collecting and using items in the dungeon. The items you have collected, along with the strengthen of your classmates, can turn you into a party member.

In the dungeon (travel to dungeons of varied difficulty), you can decide to be a party member or a monster. Monsters roam around the dungeons and perform various actions, which will change as you progress in the game. A monster can die, resulting in the removal of its status and causing the adjacent monsters' actions to change.

Wikipedia explains a VPN as a virtual private network. A VPN provides data encryption and is used to create a private connection between you and a server somewhere else in the world. If you are connected to a VPN, your computer will act like it is located in the country of the VPN server and your government will not be able to see your IP address as you browse the internet (because your ISP doesn't have access to your browsing history). It also makes your computer untrackable because your IP address will be concealed by the VPN server and tracked instead. (In 5 years, your IP address will no longer matter. This is the reason that every website you visit automatically creates a record of your browsing history with the help of third-party cookies. Every website can track you and has the power to do so.
