Single Player System Requirements: OS: Windows 7/8/10 Processor: Any Memory: 2 GB RAM Graphics: Hardware Accelerated OpenGL and DirectX Storage: 2 GB available space Sound Card: DirectX and non-accelerated Sound Card is supported 1 Horror Fun I really dig the art style. It's reminiscent of the old B-movies that are more pulp fiction than horror. 2 Creepy Fun game to explore. 3 Gameplay Ideas A little light on backstory, but I like the idea of the playable character being an ancient evil. It's like an archeological dig. Only half the 'prize' is game time, but the overall experience is fun. It's like a nostalgic "one more time before the end of the world". Only one game of the year so far, but I'd recommend this game. 4 Stages I think the main selling point of this game is its stages, with different locations and different enemies you encounter. You really feel like the game is in a different setting with a different atmosphere. 5 Cheat Mode It'd be nice to be able to cheat and get infinite health or ammo or experience points, but without any way to accomplish this, the game is fine as is. Horror genre is commonly associated with multiple story-lines within one game. Which means that sometimes we feel like something is out of place when the series is restarted for example. 4 Stages I really dig the art style. The source code for this exploit was initially sent to me anonymously by a family member who wished to remain anonymous. Contents: 1. Exploit 2. Obfuscation 3. Deobfuscation 1. Exploit The exploit is a buffer overflow in the Sound Player application. I added a size assertion check to the ofSound method such that trying to allocate a buffer greater than 0x40C in size will cause the zero-to-40C buffer to be overwritten with 0xc0 bytes. This takes advantage of the fact that Sound Player expects that 0x40C is a valid size for a audio buffer in the constructor, as well as checks the size before writing the buffer. However, in order to overwrite the first 0xc0 bytes of the buffer, it needs the location of the sandbox. This is determined by obtaining the size of the rem.stdout within the sandbox environment: char sbSandbox[0x14]; unsigned char rem[0x14]; 0x14 is the common size that rem.stdout has been seen to take. This value needs to be checked first, to make sure there's enough space remaining to overwrite the rem.stdout location: char sbSandbox[0x14]; unsigned char rem[0x14]; long bcvTotal = getenv("bcvTotal"); unsigned long remStdoutSize = bcvTotal; unsigned char remStdout[bcvTotal]; bzero(&remStdout, sizeof(remStdout)); In order to gain control, we need to recursively call the Sound Player application's ofSound method until the call gets stuck in the sandbox. Once stuck, we want to overwrite rem.stdout with the exploit in the sandbox. To do this, we first invoke ofSound in a smart object inspector with the call = 0xe0000bbce5c4d1260f5c8049d4fca51 , which through a little low-level fiddling, causes our sandbox to be called again, with rem.stdout pointing to 0x8e15. This is our opportunity to overwrite the rem.stdout with our 0xc0 bytes payload. An exploded view of the call object: Added isExplicitlyInitialized false,
