Ikea's own invention, the self closing LUM sofas, have come in for some serious criticism for the way in which it grabs furniture in homes. It is thought this can result in suffocation and even death, but can we please stop? Swedish Furniture-maker HAYHUA, who are responsible for this, have received a torrent of abuse on social media over the sofa, with people calling it 'dreadful', 'sketchy', 'frightening' and 'totally ridiculous', with one Twitter user calling it 'shocking.' The company has since told FEMAIL that the sofas are safe, and that the company has alerted the Swedish Consumer Ombudsman with concerns about their three self-closing sofas, which were launched in 2016. Ikea's self-closing LUM sofas have been banned in Britain over fears it could be unsafe HAYHUA told FEMAIL: 'We have the impression this sofa is currently being perceived as a niche product, which is rather an over-reaction. We have taken the decision to focus on the products which we believe will make an immediate difference in people's lives, and self-closing sofas was not one of those.' In a statement on the firm's website, the firm said the self-closing mechanism only gets activated when a baby is on its back, and added that people are 'expected to assist' in stopping the mechanism. However, as FEMAIL points out, this position is wrong, as the simple act of pushing forward on the sofa or putting your arms over the top can stop the mechanism. Swedish furniture-maker HAYHUA has received plenty of abuse for a sofa which has the 'self-closing' function While HAYHUA say they've sold about 4,000 of the sofas in the UK, only a tiny fraction of them have been reported to have problems – if you're still worried about it, now is the time to complain. With thousands of people tweeting about self-closing sofas, and people posting pictures of themselves in the middle of the night, it's probably time to put down the bananas and perhaps hand over a few of
