On the territory of a denuded Earth, a band of scavengers roam and rebuild their homes with the salvaged materials found on the battlefields of the Second World War. The ripshot, an old and dangerous anti-gravity vehicle, is a symbol of pride and tradition, and an engrained part of their culture. In an attempt to revitalize this dying industry, a new and extreme form of racing is created, with a strange power infused from the future. The mercurial Scarstark, the firebrand Vandraken, the violent Rexpopper, the never ending power of spinmaster Spike and the sharp razorback fighting his way through Giddy-Up-Giddy-Down-Giddy. Multiple teams compete on 12 tracks, from small mountain ranges and narrow valleys to enormous city highways and highways, always in pursuit of victory. They're competing for the position of champion, the scarstark's ultimate prize. But also for the right to own an individual ripshot, a symbol of their pride and the last hope for the future. Ripshots is a hybrid between racing, platforming and climbing, with easy to learn hard to master controls. This game features dynamic racing and a fun approach to immersive vertical movement, all enhanced with a generous amount of local and online multiplayer. Let's start with the definition of cash flow is a company's ability to generate cash from operations, that is to say, minus changes in marketable assets like inventory and inventory less accumulated depreciation. The thing that gets us is that cash flows tend to be driven by the amount of sales you make, and Apple's profit margin typically tends to be much higher, than, say, the small restaurant chain. Okay, Herb, so cash flows are driven by the marketable goods sold, I mean a high-margin product, that is, a company that makes a majority of its sales on one high margin product, that the consumer wants to buy or have today. I'm a coffee person, and I ordered that K-cup, I go to the convenience store and I want the high-margin K-cup.Okay, you got that. But I'm not going to be interested in the shares of those companies. First, I'm going to jump on the bandwagon, I'm going to buy the companies that are doing what I want, and in the case of Apple, it is
