Key Features: System Info Table Product Data Table Payment Table Quotes Table Supplier Info Table Invoice Table As shown in the screenshots, a typical table structure in SYSME POS can easily be modified and organized into your unique business needs. As a running example, we'll show how to modify the product table from the default format to a more easier-to-use format: From the table list view, simply choose the Edit > Setup Columns or Edit > Setup Formulas option and click OK to modify your tables. Add a product table from the list and then go to the column or field you wish to modify. Change the type to Custom (select from drop-down) and paste your text in the left column. In this example, we will paste the product name in the first column, product price in the second column and the quantity sold in the third column. Clicking OK will display a blue form to format your table data. Select the appropriate format (e.g. Number, Currency, Text, Date, Time, etc.) and add columns and formulas as needed. To remove any unnecessary columns or fields, simply drag the column or field to the right or left position so you only have the information you need in your product table.Q: Python multiprocessing with loop returning nothing I have a list of words and I want to process them as they are added to the list. I think the loop needs to be multiprocess but my attempts have been unsuccessful. import sys from multiprocessing.dummy import Pool as ThreadPool import re def process_words(inp): words = [] for word in inp: word_list = re.split(' +', word) print word, len(word_list) #word, length = word_list.pop(0) words.append(word) return words if __name__ == "__main__": for n in range(20): inp = sys.stdin.read() if
