Dharamsala's Empowering Every Single Girl Summit A young woman of a Himalayan monastery, placed on an international witness table, emerged with a cry for justice. Her words and testimony built momentum of dialogue in the region, challenging political narratives and systemic barriers for justice in South Asia, and the region and beyond. On December 2, a young Buddhist nun spoke at a conference in Dharamsala, India, where she stood on a witness table, using her testimony to explore the social and economic barriers and limitations that young girls face in India and South Asia. Zorigom, a Buddhist nun from Nepal, began her life journey as a child who was traveling to the towns to work in restaurants. Her family—her grandmother and mother—was happy to have her in those restaurants, working by torchlight, but she wanted more. When she was 20 years old, she was invited to join the monastery at Chirang, Nepal. As she made the decision to enter the monastery, she knew that if she was chosen by the community, it would be only for a limited time. She knew the life inside the monastery was no easy one. "I was not interested in the position or knowing who would be the village-in-charge. She was looking for a change from the life of mother, daughter and grandmother and being the village-in-charge was not a new change," Zorigom says of her first experience in the monastery. "I asked for an experience to change my life, but I was not happy when I entered the monastery." In the Nepalese tradition, women who reach old age are allowed to return home. Zorigom told her story of returning home for the first time at 21 years of age. The people who once made a joyful occasion of her homecoming, greeted her sadly when they heard that she had been raised in a monastery. Zorigom was shocked to see it. "You have grown up to become a nun and you will have a hard life to live," they told her. "You will never have a husband and you will have no children." Zorigom said she wasn't Example: /page1.php?id=1 /page2.php?id=2 /page3.php?id=3 /page4.php?id=4 /page5.php?id=5 All of these pages are loaded using ajax and called through a div, which uses different class on click based on which link was clicked. Each page has a different table associated with it and each page needs different data. What I would like to do is to access session data in the ajax loaded pages and carry that specific data through to the new page and get refreshed without a redirect. I have tried using this session_start(); if(isset($_GET['id'])){ $_SESSION['my_id'] = $_GET['id']; } but it doesn't work, here is an example of a link in the div: Page 4 And my load page script looks like this: function loadPage() { $.ajax({ url: "", type: "GET", data: id, dataType: "html",
