The specificity and generalizability of the Charlson Index of comorbidity has been questioned. 2. The performance of comorbidity indices in predicting mortality and length of stay has not been adequately studied, although there is an impression that the more comprehensive the index the better its performance. 3. The issue of validity should not be discussed in terms of the possible adverse effects of research on patients, but rather on the validity of a research question. 4. Published data using the Charlson Index must be used cautiously in assessing the validity of the index, especially in the general population, since the validity of the index depends on validity of the research question.Bates Motel type TV Show Ever since its premiere back in 2013, Bates Motel has been a little hard to pin down. I suppose the series could be described as a straightforward rendition of a Gothic murder mystery: Norman (Freddie Highmore) and his mother Norma (Vera Farmiga) act as both parents and owner to the motel where Norman, now a teenager, resides. However, the series has also embodied a good deal of Gothic horror over the years. The first episode, when Norman demonstrates his psychic ability and has a nightmare (to what end?!) and we have flashbacks of when he was abused by his father, seem more like Grimm's fairy tales of old. The second episode, which has Norman and Norma (aged 12 and 13) stumbling upon the corpse of a family, seem more like a meeting of Abbott and Costello. However, in the just-released second season premiere, Bates Motel really gets going in a fresh way. Considering the show still takes place in the present day, and we aren't suddenly transported to a ghost town, there are a few changes. For starters, Norman is now a teen whose father has recently died. We also get to know how Norman came into being, and if one of the victims of the first season

Gentle procedures can be used to remove tissue, reduce swelling, and thereby rapidly decrease pain and limit complications. This article presents the use of massage and injection of lidocaine, physical therapy, and cryotherapy. The author compares the results for each treatment approach. The use of (1) sedation for emergency dental treatment, (2) light massage immediately following vasectomy, and (3) parenteral lidocaine injection for postoperative pain, are discussed. This article asserts that early aggressive management can reduce morbidity and minimize the need for more complex treatments.Joana Damião Joana Damião (born December 21, 1982 in Curitiba, Brazil) is a Brazilian female bodybuilding champion in the 69 kg class.
