The movies include "Rashomon", "7 Assassins" and "Rhapsody in White", starring Jackie Chan and Jet Li, as well as "Red Cliff", based on the novel by Lu Lixiong, which tells the story of the Red Army and their attempt to stop the Japanese armies from entering Shanghai. "Seven Assassins", released in 1997, is a historical thriller based on a true story, in which the Japanese government sent seven of their toughest hired killers to eliminate seven ranking Chinese officials and the main traitor responsible for their failure to stop the Japanese from invading China during the Second World War. Their journey was full of dangers and hazards, including a rogue Chinese assassin team, a hunchback poet who could read people's mind, a red-haired nun, and other characters that proved that Japanese assassins were not exactly invincible. Directed by Jia Zhangke, the movie, starring Zhang Ziyi, Chen Changzhi, Yu Bo and Andy Lau, has a great deal of suspense, but is also a historical fact-based film. Ziyi plays Zhang Kangmei, a powerful Japanese woman living in China and a leader in the Japanese secret services. Chen Changzhi plays Zhang Bo, a famous Japanese assassin who travels to China to hunt down Zhang Kangmei. Yu Bo plays Liu Kefan, a hunchback Chinese assassin who is ordered by Zhang Bo to kill Zhang Kangmei, and who becomes trapped with Zhang Kangmei on the same mission. Andy Lau plays a Chinese murderer who escapes prison and goes to China to track Zhang Kangmei down. "Red Cliff", the second film, was released in 2008, tells the story of two brothers who have fought in wars for generations: one, a commander in the Red Army, who now lives in the tastic Hackers are jerks (NOT cool, mind you) A couple things stand out about Wendelin Werner's "I am a hacker now," in 2006. One is that although he bases this manifesto on the ethics of a hacker, he paints a very negative picture of what hackers are really like. Another is that I can find a few quotes in this manifesto that are false. I wouldn't expect this of an article penned by a computer science expert. In the spirit of transparency, here's my full transcript of some of the claims made by Mr. Werner. Whereas hackers are polite & versatile True, but this is only true of hackers that don't pick up a 60-inch plasma TV and start swinging it repeatedly like a club. For the rest of us, yeah, they can be a pain in the ass if we don't clean up after them, but they're also my brother and I demand that any bug they find be fixed straight away. By contrast, in the software world people are fucked if they find a bug. They ask the door by stepping on it. Whereas hackers hate stupid people This is a mischaracterization of the very ethos of the hacker subculture. Hackers like to take risks: they've got to be better than you. They have to be able to pay those risks back in spades. If they didn't, that's a sign that their design is fucking stupid. Whereas hackers value the free exchange of ideas Again, Werner's description here is far more negative than the description you'd get from talking to a real hacker. For example, I can download EepyBird software that compiles ancient German poems from the 11th century. How's that for free exchange? Whereas hackers are fearless This is a bit like the one-eyed man in the land of the blind. Sure, there are certainly plenty of hackers that are fearless. But if you've ever been hired on, then you know how many naive developers that you had to deal with. Yes, the Swiss Army Knife of tech, knowing a half-dozen languages, that can test the world's average programmer, is a hacker. But I've got good reason to distrust that guy: I got screwed by them. Whereas hackers dislike programming frameworks
