The official confirmed that Davis' mission is to listen in on "strategic communications" and to "determine if foreign fighters were still present and whether IS was still in control." Operations like that of Davis, who changed his name to Abu Talha al-Almani after moving to Syria and apparently becoming a fanatical jihadist, have given the warring parties on the ground a running start on the possibility of a great victory. Counter-Islamic State gains of this sort are now common, with Jordanian, Iraqi, Turkish and other forces supporting the Kurds. It is much more difficult for the United States to send in ground troops. Davis has been around the block. He worked as a contractor in the Iraq war and in 2007 became a contractor for a different U.S. effort in Iraq. Within two years, he was accused of being an agent for Al Qaeda in Iraq (AQI), the ISIS precursor. During a trial, he said he had been for six years – he later testified, "For three years, yes." In 2012, he was convicted on drug charges, and sentenced to 12 months. He worked for Blackwater, the notorious private military contractor, before being hired by the State Department to work for the Agency for International Development, for what the company says was from December 2009 until September 2011. After leaving that job, he went back to the Middle East, where he met some “operatives” who sent him to Raqqa, the capital of ISIS’ self-proclaimed caliphate. He became a bridge between the CIA and the ISIS fighters. Whether he was on the ground or on the phone with the U.S. military, Davis stood out in the role of independent, suspicious observer. In February 2015, ISIS had just taken over the city of Ramadi in western Iraq and were about to
