A convenient and competitive entry for new phosphoinositide 3-kinases (PI3Ks) has been identified from a cDNA encoding a natural plant product, cinnamic acid. Phosphoinositide 3-kinase (PI3K) enzymes phosphorylate phosphatidylinositol (PI) at the 3-position of the inositol ring, thus generating three second messengers, inositol 1,4,5-trisphosphate (IP₃), diacylglycerol (DG) and phosphatidylinositol 3,4,5-trisphosphate (PIP₃). These in turn have a wide range of effects on a cell. The effects depend not only on the particular phosphorylation pattern, but also on the local concentration of the second messengers in the cell. Within the PI3K family, there are four classes of PI3K. Classes I and II phosphorylate PI at the D4 position, and classes III and IV phosphorylate PI at the D5 position. (H. Partidelli, in "Phosphoinositides: key regulators of cell growth, survival and differentiation", (eds) A Serra-Garcia, K. & Glikman, H, Wiley-Liss, New York, 2000, pp. 249-267). Inhibition of PI3K or any of the PI3K isoforms may have an effect on the proliferation of transformed cells. For example, high levels of PI3K activation have been detected in a number of human cancer cell lines and other cell types. PI3K has also been implicated in several signal transduction pathways. Furthermore, PI3K appears to play a role in a number of diseases and conditions including diabetes, hematopoietic and autoimmune diseases, cardiovascular diseases, inflammatory diseases and allergic diseases. Accordingly, PI3K inhibitors are useful for the prevention and treatment of cancer, cardiovascular diseases, autoimmune diseases, inflammatory diseases and allergic diseases, as described below.Q: HTML: How to add new HTML Line Below the first line? VANCOUVER—Former Vancouver park board chair Sarah Kirby-Yung says she's surprised more people aren't talking about the sexual nature of her face to face conference on CBC's The Investigators on Monday. About 300 people showed up for the Sunday event in Vancouver, with 50 extra tickets available for the live broadcast, but Kirby-Yung says the event moved from her home to CBC's studios in New Westminster, B.C., to accommodate the greater crowd. The main topic of conversation during the live event was the coming court case involving Kirby-Yung, former Vancouver city councillor Geoff Meggs and two other men. When it's all over, Kirby-Yung's lawyer is hoping for a negotiated settlement, not a full-on trial. But the topic took a turn on Monday when Kirby-Yung was interviewed by Andrew Chang, host of The Investigators. She said she had asked all four men to reveal what they were doing on their mobile phones but not one of them obliged. Kirby-Yung said it was disappointing they didn't answer her questions. She said she felt there was no question she wasn't entitled to ask because she is the subject of the allegations. "They are not going to answer the question if they are in a sexual relationship (with me)," she said. "But I tried to be a good sport and be nice and they were not nice to me, and in the end I think it's unfortunate that they are not stepping up." Kirby-Yung said she'd planned to tell the court on Monday that all her accusers are untrustworthy. "That is what I would like to be able to share with the court, that they've been untrustworthy from the very beginning. They lied to me, they lied to others. It's never been about getting this outcome. It's about the truth." She said she asked her accusers repeatedly what they were doing on their phones. "They could have blown off the question and said, 'I'm just going to leave the court,' but they didn't." Chang told Kirby-Yung that he was curious why she'd make such a request
