Apparently Sydney is willing to call our minister twice a week to talk to her. This is a great life for you and the kids to be apart for a couple of weeks....you know, you need to take some time off when the kids are so young. I can't believe how well I can understand things they say (although i think I have to read it over and over again to really get it.) oh my. how excited i am for you, wendy! (and you too vicki.. um, oh, who doesn't?) and (dr. mack..) what an amazing place that hospital sounds. i've been there a couple of times, it's really nice. nice to meet you!

Q: Why is there a contrast in the "heads-down" position when the plane is on final approach? There is a contrast in the terminal when a plane is on final approach. On one side of the plane the pilot can be seen behind the windshield, but on the other side he is up in the cockpit, facing forward. Why does this happen?

A: One reason is light. The glares and glare reflections from the wing surfaces and the engine cowlings, combined with the light from the other side of the cockpit (which often is quite bright due to the sun), will make it very difficult to determine where the pilots are. There are additional reasons, but this will give you a starting point. A: You're also seeing the way the cockpit is exposed to direct sunlight. It tends to get quite hot at the back of the plane, and if you're not paying attention to your own visor, you could get a sunburn. Aside from the discomfort and potential for harm, the pilot on the left may not be the same type as the one on the right, and he may be the slowest pilot in the airplane. As to why there isn't just a giant red light beaming out from the cockpit: safety. Aircraft seats are designed for minimal impact, and they're much more comfortable than ever before. Do you want your pilot to sit
