Note You can find Lightroom at . # Dealing with Images In this section, you'll deal with the raw and jpeg files that you capture. After you import them into your computer, you're ready to deal with images in general. First, however, you need to read about the file type of your captures. # Image Formats The world of digital images is a confusing one. Is it a jpeg or a `_.jpg_`? If you have a Nikon D3100, and you used a Nikon Speedlight SB-800 to illuminate the scene, is it a RAW image? Is it a RAW file, a jpeg, or a `_.tif_`? (Do you even know that a `_.tif_` file is for film, the precursor to modern digital images? You probably don't. In this book, I'll address the issue of file formats with multiple chapters on the topic.) ## Raw Files RAW (also called NEF) is a not-yet-processed file format. You aren't supposed to edit these files. Your camera processes the file right as you snap the picture. When it's ready, it sends the image to your computer by a computer-to-camera bridge. This process is called `_.jpeg encoding_`. The jpeg is an image that is much easier to manipulate, though a RAW image has a number of advantages (see Figure 5-4).

Blog Posted By Media Options Washington – The tide of public opinion turned around fast when it came to the most important elections of 2010, but what was to become perhaps the most important election in 2012 won't be decided until next year. Major decisions in the federal courts will be made next year, when the President Obama makes his final appointments to the appellate courts. In the US Supreme Court and five appellate courts, the President has 21 months to make his choices. One of the most controversial areas the President will address in his second term is immigration. In two rulings last year the Supreme Court limited federal power over immigration, and in one the Court dealt a blow to the President's nominee to the high court. But in the final weeks of 2010, those rulings were reversed and the President's hold on the most hotly contested issue of the last decade has been even tighter than it was a year ago. By July 2011, the Court had completed its work on the immigration questions, but that didn't mean the President's choices for the appellate courts were complete. There was one vacancy left and four recess appointments. The Supreme Court has only ten justices, and the President in his final year was able to make a third appointment to the high court, a seat that has been empty since the death of Justice Sandra Day O'Connor. And that final appointment, the President said, would be a woman of color. A year ago, President Obama nominated a moderate, conservative federal judge from Arizona, who would fill the seat of Justice Samuel Alito, who had retired. By many measures he was the most progressive nominee in recent history and even conservatives were likely to vote for him. But Justice Sonia Sotomayor, nominated by Obama to replace former Senator Ted Kennedy, quickly became a cause célèbre for some liberals and many Hispanic Americans. She was viewed as less moderate than Justice Alito and at the time many White House aides said they expected opposition to be strong. The White House changed its strategy. This spring, the President made three high-profile recess appointments to the federal courts and they were all women of color. In July 2010, Obama made both Justice Sotomayor, the first Hispanic woman ever to be nominated to the high court, and, later that year, Justice Elena Kagan, the first black woman nominated to the high court. Both appointments were effective on

Results of the Vatican's "Great Jubilee of Mercy" for the sick, and more. On Saturday, Pope Francis will preside over the celebration of the four hundredth anniversary of the institution of the Jubilee Year of Mercy, a Jubilee that ends on the feast of the First Sunday of Lent, this year. In 1585, Pope Sixtus V "announced a jubilee throughout the Catholic world for the year 1590, so that the Lord, in his mercy, would help poor Christians everywhere," says a statement from the Vatican website, as Pope Francis prepares to pronounce the jubilee, which will go on until December 8. "In fact, after this Jubilee, only the jubilee of 2000 will mark a Jubilee of Mercy." On Monday, the daily Angelus will include special prayers for our "brothers and sisters in need," reported Vatican Radio. On Tuesday, Wednesday, Thursday and Friday, the pope will also host a "General Audience to mark the end of the jubilee of mercy." The official end of the jubilee is on Sunday, December 8, but one of its purposes is to call all Catholics to help the poor all year long, and especially during Lent.
