The present invention is related to the field of integrated circuits and their design. Specifically, the present invention relates to the detection of signals at a sufficient speed and accuracy to detect the presence or absence of a ground bounce. A common way of determining the existence of a ground bounce in a specific circuit is to use a current source to place a current on the ground reference. The existence of a ground bounce is then determined by measuring the voltage present at the output of the current source. This can be done by using an open-collector or open-drain terminal of the circuit, or using an input stage that includes a current mirror (e.g., a differential transistor pair, which can be referred to as a differential pair). The current source could also be used in a method of generating a reference voltage, where a ground bounce is typically associated with a change in the reference level. This approach would involve adjusting the current in the reference current source to minimize the effect. At least 25 bands are performing on the main stage, including Yeah Yeah Yeahs, Frank Ocean, The Black Keys, The Black Lips, My Morning Jacket, and more. On Friday, the old-school rockers Black Sabbath kicked off the second day of Coachella Valley Music and Arts Festival at Indio's Empire Polo Club. The hardest rock band in the world will undoubtedly be the headlining act over the weekend, with six performances in all. "Musically, this festival is very hard to describe," said Black Sabbath in a statement. "The music is very different to the others, and we have done it our own way. The performances are not to be missed, especially on the final day. This is true heavy metal." It seems the first day of Coachella will be more under the radar, with many on-hand fans saying it's not like any other festival out there. "I definitely think it's gonna be a more underground/indie experience," said Patrick Callahan, a student at UC Irvine. "The reason being, the band we'll be watching is Black Sabbath. I've never seen them before, but from the pictures and the reviews I read, it seems like a very heavy kind of show." Craig Thompson, a construction supervisor at the Empire Polo Club, agrees that the
