1. **Start Photoshop and open the swatches palette (Windows) or Colors palette (Macs).** As shown in Figure 5-3, Photoshop's colorscheme can be customized with or without the swatch palette. To try the swatch palette, click the swatch icon at the bottom left corner of the Colors palette. **Figure 5-3:** The Windows swatches palette (left) and the Mac Colors palette (right). 2. **Click the New Swatch button and pick an image on your screen.** The New Swatch button that appears at the top of the Colors palette becomes active and the swatch palette fills with a thumbnail of the image you selected. You can click outside the swatches palette to select a different image, or click the New Swatch button again to close the palette. Sometimes the swatches palette goes to the Background/Effect swatches when you click New Swatch. This happens when you select a filter or layer style that appears to have swatches. It goes away when you start working on the layer that you are working on. The swatches palette is the one place where you can select a color from a color wheel by hovering the mouse over the arrow cursor that points to the color wheel and clicking. (Refer to Figure 5-3.) # TUTORIAL: Using the Color Picker If you want to explore the Color Picker and don't have access to the swatches palette, here's how to do it. After you select the color, you can see the color in the Color Picker by selecting the eyedropper tool from the Tools panel. After selecting the eyedropper tool, click the image you want to see the color of. An eyedropper cursor should appear and display the color of the image. When you release the mouse button, you can see the color in the Color Picker. After you see the color in the Color Picker, click where you want to put the color. If the color you want to place is one of the standard colors, clicking anywhere in the empty swatch area of the Color Picker fills it with the selected color. If the color is a custom color, click in the preview portion of the Color Picker and press Enter.
