Does this mean that the reward is greater in relation to the cost? That a reduction in potential long-term well-being is less harmful than a short-term gain? “What are you going to do in your life when you become a knight?” Everyone asked the same question to Isayo. He had been deeply fascinated by the powerful and adventurous life of knights and was a decided knight from an early age. Since childhood, he had wanted to become a knight. He always wanted to be like that: amazing and strong and fearless. Just like the kinds of knights who had been his role model in his childhood. But even after all these years, he still hadn't been selected to become a knight. This was the real reason why he said that he had become a mercenary after all. But now, in the present time, he had become a mercenary that was going around East Hyuga. He was going there to meet up with the people who were going to assist him in his quests. Now that he had seen the other mercenary, Isayo felt a little sad... “Am I in a situation where I can not choose where to go?” “If I don't go to North Hyuga, I'll have to wander around this area.” “If I don't do anything, I'm going to be in a spot of trouble.” “This is a situation that I didn't even think that I would be in.” Despite the risks, these thoughts continued to race through Isayo's head. “I should become a mercenary, but in the end, I can't decide where to go." "I have plenty of time." "I have just arrived in East Hyuga." It would be fine if he were to return to his hometown within a year. But that would be impossible for him. In fact, the time that he had spent there had been a year. For that reason, the only time that he would be able to safely return was in 2 years time. Isayo's face was gloomy. He sighed as if he was tired... "I never had any desires in the first place." He shook his head. As he told that story, he was also reflecting on the time that he had had in North Hyuga. I was in North Hyuga. Could things have been better if I was in North Hyuga? c9d1549cdd

La-Mulana is a fictional character appearing in the La-Mulana series of video games by Game Arts, developed for the Apple II, Commodore 64, Commodore 64 Lightpen, DOS, and original PlayStation. He debuted in the 1991 single-player game La-Mulana which was released in Japan on April 5, 1991, in North America in October 1992, and in Europe on November 3, 1994. The protagonist of the game, La-Mulana, is the last remaining member of an ancient civilization, and he continues a quest to find several mythical artifacts and escape a dystopian future dominated by mechanical lifeforms called "Naughts" (translated as Nothingness). Released for the Apple II, it was the first title to be developed for that platform's new extended-length disk cartridges in Japan. La-Mulana was Game Arts' first game, and was acquired by Codemasters, and ported to the Sony PlayStation and the Microsoft Windows. It is also the last La-Mulana game that was released in the United States in 1996. La-Mulana gained a cult following for being the first "Metroidvania-style" game in which players could freely roam the game's environment, exploring it, discovering its physics, and scanning and unlocking previously inaccessible areas. Its success helped Game Arts to receive contracts to create future games for the Super Famicom and the Nintendo DS. In an interview with Edge in 2016, Akira Sato stated that La-Mulana is his favorite game, and has been living in his memories with no end in sight. Concept and influences La-Mulana was Game Arts' first game. It was originally designed and implemented for the Apple II after developing two versions of Namco's E.V.O.: Search for Eden for that platform. In order to be able to expand the game, Game Arts co-founder Satoru Takizawa became acquainted with the Medium C Plus, and he decided to use this platform. Daisuke "Akira" Seya was chosen for the character La-Mulana. Takizawa wanted to name the game Carmen San Diego, but Atari Corp. asked them to change the title: they had trademarked that name. According to Takizawa and his brother Takuo, the name "La-Mulana" was chosen after a discussion with their elder sister, who had used a term called "la-mune
