Pluckit is a program that automatically searches newsgroups for binary attachments. The downloaded files are stored in the specified folder where they are easily accessible. Pluckit automatically downloads any file that is assigned to the user as "Unattended Downloader" in the newsgroups. This means that most newsgroups don't have to be manually inspected by the user in order for files to be downloaded. This makes Pluckit ideal for users that don't have the time to manually review newsgroups to find images. Pluckit also provides the user with a number of options for what files are downloaded, what sub-directories should be searched for files, what file types should be excluded from downloading, and what newsgroups should be plucked. A: There are a number of free and paid programs that do this. e.g. Giganet, TotalIE, Paralizer, Pukeler Prog, Pluckit This invention relates to the construction of transmission lines, and particularly to distribution lines used to carry electrical power to a customer's premises and feeder lines used to carry electrical power between two or more distribution lines. Transmission lines must be carefully installed to achieve optimum power transmission and distribution characteristics while avoiding unnecessary increases in cost and obstructions to construction that could result in damage to the lines. In the case of lines and cables carrying large amounts of electrical power, such as electric power from a hydroelectric power dam, it is important that the lines be carefully and precisely installed to avoid stress concentrations and overheating, especially at stress concentration points such as the joints between components. It is also important that power and power losses that may occur in the distribution line should be minimized. Conventional distribution lines are made up of lengths of single wire or cable or continuous lengths of cable. In the case of standard transmission lines, two or three bare copper wires are enclosed in an insulation layer, usually in order to keep the wires from shorting together. In the case of a cable
