What's new in 10mg: Always Down:

Traumatic brain injury is a reality for more Americans than ever before, resulting in 30 million people living with at least one major disability today. It's never been more urgent to fight for awareness and action to create a culture of concussion safety A concussion patient is photographed at the CPMC Trauma Registry (Courtesy: PowerLine Trauma Institute) [youtube In 2003, Gina Fristrigan, then a senior in high school, collapsed in the middle of track practice, feeling a pain between her right temple and ear. In the early days after the incident, frustrated by the treatment she and her family received from her school district, Fristrigan decided to take it upon herself to learn more about concussions. Unfortunately, the more education she gained, the less comfort she felt. During the months after the incident, she struggled with anxiety and depression, and her grades and physical fitness plummeted. Fristrigan's mother took it upon herself to learn more about concussions, reading everything she could get her hands on. Along with her mother and father, Fristrigan approached the Minneapolis Public Schools with their concerns and launched the Minnesota Health Assessment and Counseling Program. Her efforts, however, were not well-received, and the school district responded by rejecting two of Fristrigan's proposals and halting implementation of the program entirely. The progress Fristrigan made in spreading awareness about concussions was severely curtailed. Fristrigan's mother angrily remarked, "I just didn't realize how far football would get in the high schools before everyone got involved, and that now, there weren't rules. I thought, 'This is going to be the end of it'." Symptoms of traumatic brain injury appear within seconds of an injury When

Fristrigan collapsed, concussion symptoms already had begun to set in, and she had to be rushed to the emergency room (ER). At the ER, Fristrigan's parents were told that their daughter had likely suffered a concussion but that symptoms would resolve over time. While back in school, Fristrigan was told by her coach that she had blown out her knee while running and needed to seek treatment for her knee injury, which had worsened during track practice on the day of her collapse. Instead of informing the athletic trainers
