

If both operating systems are identical, you can remove the older one. Chromium has serious issues and, for the moment, the only fix that seems to work is to quit Chrome and start up a fresh profile. Creating and saving a new profile makes a new empty profile so that any cookies you might have saved elsewhere won't be transferred. Click on the icon in the upper left to start a fresh profile. If you have Chrome extensions, you might have to remove them one by one to see if that's the cause. Although I've never tried it, you might also be able to remove the extension manually by going to chrome://extensions and finding the extension and deleting it. If it won't let you, the good news is that it doesn't affect all extensions by any means. It might be wise to uninstall Chrome extensions as well in case they're the ones causing the problem. If that doesn't work, the second thing that you can try would be downloading and installing an upgraded version. In the past, Chrome has removed extensions from their servers and then re-added them later. Using the Canary Chrome has been dropping support for extensions in its stable channel and has been asking for testers for its new developer channel. Chrome Canary has no officially supported extensions, but it could provide a safe alternative. I recommend testing Canary with the very latest version of Chrome. If that's all you're using, click on the icon in the upper left and choose canary instead of stable. Instructions for manually installing an extension can be found here. If you can't get it working, you can always download the latest version. I'm always recommending it and still continue to use it. There are two official versions that you can download. One for 32 bit systems, the other for 64 bit systems. Before you install, make sure that you've downloaded the source file and not a binary. You can download them here. Click on the download for your system and follow the onscreen instructions. If you choose the 32 bit version, the installer will probably ask if you want to remove the web browser. If you select the 64 bit version, you won't be asked because there's no web browser to remove. Remember to select the full version of the file and not an edited version. Unless otherwise noted, you can download all of the pre

The federal government says it will not oppose the city of Winnipeg's next round of requests to repay land for non-compliance with the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation's environment compliance orders. On Friday, the CDIC announced it was repaying the city $4.6 million because of the "illegal clearing of public land in conservation areas," said John Kenney, a senior CDIC official based in Winnipeg. The province had already repaid the city $10 million last year for mismanagement of 177,000 acres of prime agricultural land. "The federal government has decided to let those two repayments stand and it will not be using its ability to revoke them at this time," said Kenney. He added CDIC is unable to comment on how much more the city might be in arrears, or if it plans to request more funds. City of Winnipeg spokesperson Karyne Cullen said the city will not be commenting. Council approved the latest agreement to repay the land on Monday. Residents and the public will be notified when the land is available for sale, said Kenney. "These types of situations are always difficult to resolve," he said. "So we're just trying to work through what are the parameters and how that's going to happen." Reckless or negligent conduct: Kenney Sparky's on Whiteshell Road, located east of Harvest Field Road, is the furthest out of range and will have the most wetlands removed. (Peter Griffin/CBC) Kenney said the reclaimed land will likely be in dry streams or wetlands. "It doesn't mean we need to sell it," he said. "We can do different things with the land and what's coming up we're talking to [Movoto] and doing some activity there 6d1f23a050
