James E. Allen James E. Allen (February 16, 1919 – August 19, 2001) was a politician, labour leader, and a member of the Senate of Canada from 1968 to 1997. A senior member of the United Electrical Workers of Canada (UE), Allen became president of the union and president of the Canadian Labour Congress in 1968. He entered the Senate in 1968 after serving as Minister of Labour for the Quebec Liberal government of Jean Lesage, and was re-elected for a second term in 1972. Allen led the effort to end a railway strike in 1984, during which he and other labour leaders were involved in violent clashes with striking railway workers in Kahnawake, Ontario. In the 1985 federal election, he was the labour candidate for the New Democratic Party. He was opposed by Liberal incumbent Pierre-Luc Dusault, and received fewer votes than any other labour candidate running for that party (2,029). In 1986, Allen helped found the Council of Canadians to oppose expansion of pipelines in British Columbia, after the Northern Gateway Pipeline and Kinder Morgan's proposal for the Trans Mountain Pipeline and the expansion of the pipelines through the northern Great Plains. In 1987, the Canadian Press reported that Allen was a former vice-president of Trans Canada Pipeline Ltd., a company created to encourage support for the Trans-Canada Pipeline. After leaving the Senate, Allen served as president of the Canadian Labour Congress and the World Federation of Trade Unions, becoming a Companion of the Order of Canada in 1995. He died in Vancouver, British Columbia, in 2001.
