I would like to count how many rows are in there, preferably in a standard SQL way, i.e. without having to do any formatting. I suppose I could use Python with "import re" and then run the Python scripts on the file and pass the count to my server, but I'm pretty sure there is a more efficient way. The SQL statements are piped from a legacy Java code and I use Unix commands to process the code with awk, sort, uniq, whatever, etc. I also tried grepping for "INSERT", or "DELETE", but I'm not quite sure how to count the number of rows. A: If your SQL statements include some sort of start/end delimiters, you could use /^INSERT/ {print 'the number of INSERT statements:', line_number++} /^DELETE/ {print 'the number of DELETE statements:', line_number++}. The number of lines is now in line_number. If your SQL statements don't include such delimiters, you could try something like /^INSERT|DELETE/ {line_num++}. Q: Win32 DialogBox - change text after show I'm using Win32 DialogBox in order to change text on a button after showing the Dlg. The dialog content is: IDC_BUTTON = 1; HWND hWnd = CreateDialog(hInstance, MAKEINTRESOURCE(IDC_BUTTON),
