number of patients prospectively followed on an institutional referral database over a period of nearly 10 years. Data from 1102 individuals with a single myeloma and/or MGUS for  $\geq 6$  months were analyzed. A minimum follow-up of 2 years or  $\geq 3$  remissions was needed for progression-free survival (PFS) and overall survival. Of the 1102 patients, 46% (505) had disease other than MGUS (non-MGUS); 46% of this latter group progressed to MM or died of myeloma within 16 years. An annual risk of progression from MGUS to MM was 0.57%. The actuarial 2-year PFS was 51.1%. The annual risk of progression from MGUS to MM increased with increasing International Staging System (ISS) stage. The differences in 2-year PFS among the individual stages were similar to the differences between the ISS stages. The lack of an appropriate plateau of

So, an app I am developing is about a math lesson. I've started working on the server side, and am having trouble thinking of a way to handle a failed login. A user checks out the site The user fills out a form to check out the site The user enters his/her password into a form The server checks the login If the login is successful, the user is prompted to fill out the form as normal But what if the user fills out the form, then the server gets a request to destroy the user? What I want to do is take the information that the user provided and submit it to a database. It doesn't seem like I can do that without knowing the username, and right now I can't store the user's username. A: Another option would be to store the user data in a session attribute or in a hidden input field. This way, if the user forgets the
