Field of the Invention This invention pertains to a method for making an isocyanate-containing adhesive composition and the adhesive so formed. This invention also pertains to an article comprising a first element and a second element bonded together by the adhesive. 2. Description of the Prior Art It is known to use isocyanate-containing adhesive compositions for bonding different materials together, e.g., wood and metal. Such adhesive compositions are preferred for bonding structural members together in the manufacture of a building structure. In the past, isocyanate-containing adhesives have been used for bonding wood to itself and then to other materials. It is preferred to add a plasticizer to an adhesive, such as a polymeric plasticizer, to reduce brittleness or cracking of the adhesive during storage and/or use of the adhesive. It is also known to modify an adhesive by the addition of stabilizers, such as a ketone ester of polyvinyl alcohol, to prevent urethane foaming and to accelerate the cure rate of the adhesive. The use of polymeric plasticizers in adhesives to reduce their brittleness and provide flexibility and toughness to the adhesive has been widely accepted for use with polyurethane foam. However, it is often difficult to produce an adhesive composition with reduced brittleness and increased flexibility and toughness, i.e., which can be stored for prolonged periods of time without unwanted brittleness, and which is initially tacky, and which cures at a sufficiently rapid rate upon application to a wood surface. Although it is known to use polyvinyl alcohol in the preparation of adhesive compositions for joining wood together, U.S. Pat. No. 4,163,924, issued Aug. 7, 1979, to Robert A. VanderMees disclosed the use of polyvinyl alcohol and a water-soluble plasticizer, e.g., salts of sulfosuccinate, particularly sodium sulfosuccinate, in the preparation of an adhesive composition for bonding wood together. The VanderMees adhesive composition comprises a solution of a water-soluble film-forming polymer (e.g., polyvinyl alcohol) and an ionic 6d1f23a050
