A semiconductor chip, or microchip, is a small piece of semiconductor material upon which the electronic circuits that provide the functionality of an integrated circuit are built. In a multi-chip-scale package (MCP), a first die is stacked on a second die and the stacked die may be referred to as a "package on package" (POP). The first die generally contains circuitry for the integrated circuit. The second

I am on Mountain Lion, and when I try and run'make' for the assembler, I get the following error: flex: command not found I've tried installing flex from source, but get an error that another version of flex is being installed. I think it installed the 32bit version instead of the 64bit version? How should I install flex? I've been googling around for a while now, but haven't found a solution that works! A: You'll need to explicitly install the Yacc/Bison packages that flex usually comes bundled with. Flex is actually part of a package called

'bison' - you have to select it from the OS X "install new packages" dialogue. 6d1f23a050
