.Former Playboy Bunny Gets Probation In Indiana Pimping Case Enlarge this image toggle caption Indiana State Police Indiana State Police A jury has decided that Terry Wayne Holbrook should serve three years in prison on federal charges that he employed several underage prostitutes and pimped some of them. Holbrook, who was wearing a red jail jumpsuit, fought with the jury during closing arguments, telling the jury that the government was trying to get him in jail for "trying to make a difference." Under a plea deal, Holbrook pleaded guilty to prostitution charges in Indiana two years ago. At the time, Holbrook was working for Erotic Services, a company with clients in the adult film industry, and prosecutors had tried to make a case that he ran the business with other co-defendants. But that case fell apart, and Holbrook was able to go free. Prosecutors tried to put him on trial in the case against four other co-defendants, including his fiancé Heather Andrews. But the jury in that trial found him not guilty of all counts, including accusations that he was pimping a 16-year-old girl from Elkhart, Ind. The jury convicted Holbrook of one count of conspiracy to commit sex trafficking of minors, two counts of patronizing a prostitute, and one count of attempting to do the same. This is the second conviction for Holbrook on prostitution charges. He was convicted in Indiana's Johnson County for pimping a 16-year-old girl. "The fact that he's putting up a fight about the victimization of the women who worked for him doesn't mean that he had nothing to do with it," said prosecutors Andy Williams and Jennifer Norris. The jury was surprised by the verdicts, Norris said, because the trial lasted just a few days and came down to a jury-selection process. "It's a very close call," she said. "You got some really good people." The government still plans to go after Holbrook in state court for pimping charges related to the Elkhart victim. Court documents filed with Holbrook's sentence are in accord with the probation officers' original recommendation of three years of prison and eight years of probation. Holbrook pleaded guilty to pimping before his trial on trafficking charges, but that part of the plea deal was rejected by the jury. In front of Holbrook in the c6a93da74d
