The Everest region covers almost 20 percent of the area in Nepal. The girl's mother, aged about 20, was already dead when she fell while on her way to check on the girl, said Deb

Raj Pandey, superintendent of the Ghandruk area where the accident happened. "The mother was trying to get close to the girl so she could check on her, when she fell down the mountain," said Pandey. He said they were initially unsure of how exactly the girl had died as there was no trail leading down the mountain. "We do not know how or why the accident happened," he said. "According to our initial investigation, she (the mother) must have slipped off a cliff and then landed at a higher level." Pandey said the mother could be seen lying next to the girl, who was in a critical condition but was not breathing. The girl and the mother were a part of the same family. The region is home to more than a million trekkers and climbers, who have set up camp at the popular trekking destinations of Everest Base Camp and Gorak Shep after the last three weeks of the Everest base camp climbing. According to the latest figures from the Nepal Mountaineering Association, there were about 10,000 trekkers and climbers in the region as of June 8, and it was expected the number of climbers would jump more than three-fold this year.
